A rock art recording project discovered that a pictographic style previously presumed to be fairly recent (around 1280 years before present), is likely to be much older, thereby forcing a reconsideration of previous assumptions about the culture that produced it.