Resource of the Month:

STUDENT LEARNING ASSISTANCE CENTER (SLAC)

The Student Learning Assistance Center (otherwise known as SLAC) is an academic support program available to all Texas State students. SLAC offers “tutoring services (individual, group, online), Supplemental Instruction (collaborative group study for specific courses), learning and study skills workshops, and learning specialist consultations free of charge.” You can go to SLAC for help in a variety of courses including math, biology, accounting, chemistry, philosophy, writing and more. SLAC can be found on the 4th floor of Alkek Library or check out their website for this and additional information: http://www.txstate.edu/slac/
The Nutrition and Foods Program at Texas State teaches students to understand, develop, and implement all aspects of nutrition in order to help prevent diseases and encourage a healthy lifestyle. Many different courses are offered to aid students in understanding the principles of nutrition, and many rely on a firm understanding of chemistry and biology. The program aims to “prepare graduates for careers in industry, dietetics, government, private advocacy programs, research, and/or academia.” The program offers three different Bachelor of Science in Family and Consumer Sciences tracks:

- Nutrition and Foods with Dietetics Concentration (For students who wish to obtain the Registered Dietitian credential)
- Nutrition and Foods with Selected Minor
- Nutrition and Foods Teacher Certification in Hospitality, Nutrition, and Food Sciences, Grades 8-12

Sample job titles include: Wellness Program Coordinator, School Foodservice Director, Nutrition Counselor, Food Safety Specialist, Quality Assurance Tester, and Food Marketing Specialist.
