ON THE COVER
Iceland Poppy, 2004,
Kate Breakey

ONE OF THE great joys—and perhaps the only joy—of being an interim director is getting to work more closely with some of the fine people who contribute so much to the Wittliff's success. Over the past few months I've met regularly with our Associate Vice President, Joan Heath, along with our Vice President for Information Technology, Dr. Van Wyatt.

On a parallel track, I've also visited extensively with founding donor Bill Wittliff as well as many of our individual donors. And then I've had the pleasure of day-to-day interactions with the Wittliff Collections' terrific, highly dedicated staff. (They continue to make us proud—see p. 11 for news of the recent honors they have received.)

What I see in all of this is a sense of a shared mission regarding the Wittliff Collections. These folks have come together in recognition that we are building something uniquely important—a kind of cultural cathedral that reveres, safeguards, and offers up for contemplation the artistic treasures of our region. As J. Frank Dobie well said, "People living in the Southwest will lead fuller and richer lives if they become aware of what it holds."

From collecting the artifacts to celebrating the authors and artists, the Wittliff is a vital zócalo, a town center where the arts and the community come together. We seek to engage our audiences on many levels, including making use of leading social media platforms. To that end, we have recently developed a Facebook page and YouTube channel (see p. 4).

As part of our efforts to strengthen our operations, the Wittliff Collections recently participated in a museum assessment program, conducted by the American Association of Museums (AAM). We began with our staff and university administrators completing a self-study, which was submitted as a detailed report to the AAM. In June, we hosted our on-site assessor, Lisa Hanover, who directs the Berman Museum of Art at Ursinus College in Pennsylvania and is past president of the Association of Academic Museums & Galleries.

We weren't sure what to expect from our review. It's one thing to think you're doing a pretty good job. It's quite another to put yourself at the mercy of an independent, outside appraiser.

After Lisa closely analyzed our written report, she spent two days on campus, interviewing everyone on the Wittliff staff as well as meeting with Joan Heath and Van Wyatt. She asked good, tough questions.

A few weeks later, Lisa responded with her report: a solid endorsement of the Wittliff Collections. She described us as a "stellar operation," noting the Wittliff "is operating from a position of strength, and while the organization has been on a fast trajectory in terms of physical evolution, collections development, staff, and programming, the process has been deliberate and driven by a professional staff that is invested in the mission of the organization and a respect for their colleagues."

Lisa also noted that, "An active founding donor, Bill Wittliff, continues to be an enthusiastic proponent of these distinctive collections, and Texas State University—San Marcos has responded with a significant investment of financial capital in facilities, staff, and in support of acquisitions."

This AAM assessment underscores the benefits of cooperation among the staff, university administration, and our individual donors.

Our shared sense of mission is one of the Wittliff's key strengths, and it is responsible for much of our success. We are committed to meeting every new challenge from here.

And so, if you are among those who believe in our mission and have confidence in our operations, would you consider reaching out with support for this important work? Charged with stewardship, we hope to continue collecting and preserving our cultural treasures, illuminating their importance in our region and beyond. As a place of instruction as well as inspiration, we look for every opportunity to invite scholarship, dialogue, and interaction with our many and diverse audiences. Your help makes all the difference in the world. Thank you. ★

Interim Director / Curator

the WILLIE NELSON recording collection

—By Graduate Assistant Alan Schaefer, special contributor
THE WITTLIFF COLLECTIONS recently acquired a significant collection of Willie Nelson material that includes the vast majority of the Texas legend's discography. As a lifelong Willie fan, musician, and record collector, I was thrilled to have the opportunity to inventory the acquisition.

What I was shocked to discover among the 877 recordings was the very first Willie Nelson record, a 45 rpm from 1957, "No Place For Me" backed with "Lumberjack." Recorded in Vancouver, Washington, while Willie was working as a disc jockey and released on Willie Nelson Records, the disc introduced one of the more singular voices in American popular song. His treatment of songwriter and fellow Texan Leon Payne's "Lumberjack" displays the nuanced vocal phrasing and characteristic wit that has come to be the trademark of a Willie Nelson tune.

Acquired from John Kalinsky, a consummate collector of Nelson's work, the materials contain LP and 45 rpm records, audio cassettes, CDs, DVDs, and VHS cassettes. The oldest records here are two 45s from 1954 by Dave Isbell that feature Nelson on electric guitar. Released by Sarg Records, a small label from Luling, Texas, these are Willie Nelson's earliest appearances on record.

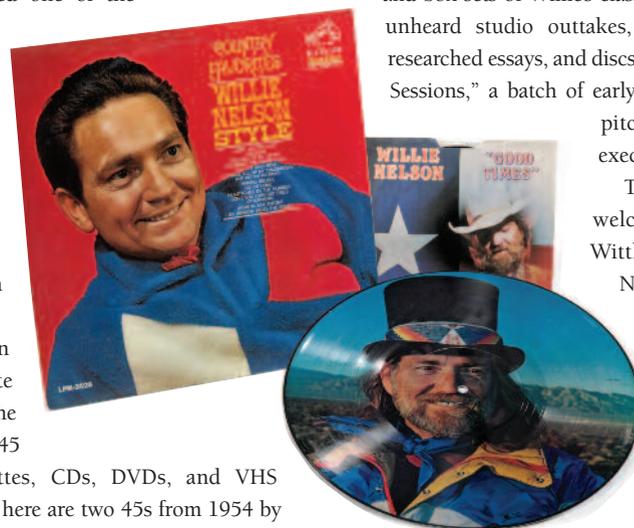

The collection chronicles Willie's entire career, from his humble beginnings as a studio sideman to renowned bandleader and songwriter, culminating with his critically acclaimed 2010 release, simply titled "Country Music."

Anyone who has attended a Willie Nelson concert can tell you about the marathon sets, the surprise guest appearances, and the melting-pot audiences of hippies, cowboys, bikers, and whoever else might show up. The collection features a rare DVD that captures this euphoric atmosphere at Willie's 4th of July Picnic in 1974, a carnival-like affair emceed by Leon Russell and featuring performances by Willie and some of the usual suspects such as Waylon Jennings and Jerry Jeff Walker.

Other highlights include much of Willie's early recorded output on the original vinyl records, deluxe edition CDs, and box sets of Willie's classic albums with previously unheard studio outtakes, rare photographs, well-researched essays, and discs such as "Crazy: The Demo Sessions," a batch of early demos that Willie would pitch to Nashville record executives.

These recordings are a welcome addition to the Wittliff Collections' Willie Nelson holdings, which include such artifacts as handwritten lyrics, some scribbled on paper scraps, napkins, and hotel stationery, and a handmade songbook created by the singer when he was about eleven years old. See the A-Z Guide in the Research section of our website for more on the Nelson materials. We hope this collection attracts and inspires young singers, songwriters, and musicians as well as fans and scholars of Willie's music. We encourage you to come and listen. ★

REVISITING GOODBYE TO A RIVER: A 50-YEAR ANNIVERSARY

The Wittliff Collections present this exhibition in the Southwestern Writers Collection lobby in honor of the 50-year anniversary of Knopf's publication of Goodbye to a River by John Graves. Every edition of the book ever printed is on view (it continues to remain in print), as well as a variety of materials from the author's major archive at the Wittliff, including vintage snapshots of Graves setting out on the Brazos and the canoe paddle he used during the inspirational trip. Also, on permanent display, is a full-figure bronze statue of Graves by Pulitzer Prize-winning political cartoonist and acclaimed sculptor, Patrick Oliphant, fashioned from pictures of the author taken at his ranch, Hardscrabble, by Bill Wittliff.

ACCLAIMED AS ONE of America's greatest writers, Cormac McCarthy is now the subject of a landmark exhibition at the Wittliff Collections.

The Wittliff acquired McCarthy's literary papers in December of 2007 and made the archive available to researchers in May 2009. Now, the Wittliff is mounting the first comprehensive display of the Cormac McCarthy materials, prepared by Curator Steve Davis.

"This exhibition of McCarthy's work is a great opportunity for his fans, along with those who are just plain curious about him, to get a unique view of his work," said Davis.

For much of his career McCarthy was America's best-kept literary secret. He received a MacArthur 'Genius' grant and was highly praised by connoisseurs, yet his novels sold poorly and quickly went out of print. His 1985 novel, Blood Meridian—unheralded at the time—is now considered by many literary scholars to be one of the most important books of the 20th century.

In 1992, McCarthy at last achieved widespread acclaim for his writing with All the Pretty Horses, which became a bestseller and won the National Book Award. His 2005 novel, No Country for Old Men, became an Academy Award-winning film, and his 2007 novel, The Road, won the Pulitzer Prize for fiction.

McCarthy began writing full-time in 1960, but for the first 30 years of his career he lived on the edge of poverty. Yet he refused offers for book signings, lectures, or interviews. His former wife, Annie DeLisle, told the New York Times that, "Someone would call up and offer him $2,000 to come speak at a university about his books. And he would tell them that everything he had to say was there on the page. So we would eat beans for another week."

In a 1988 letter to his friend J. Howard Woolmer—included in the exhibition—McCarthy noted, "I've been a full time professional writer for 28 years and I've never received a royalty check. That, I'll betcha, is a record."

Cormac McCarthy: Selections from the Permanent Collection tracks the author's entire writing career. On display is everything from the college journal where McCarthy published his first story to manuscript pages for his signature works.

"In viewing McCarthy's papers, you can see the meticulous, uncompromising attention he gives to his manuscripts," said Davis. "This exhibition showcases how his art came into being."

In many cases, McCarthy spent decades working on his stories before the books were published. One example featured in the exhibition is McCarthy's screenplay, "No Country for Old Men," which he completed in the 1980s but was unable to sell at the time. He eventually reworked the screenplay into a novel, and 20 years later, No Country For Old Men was published. The film version, made by the Coen brothers, won the Academy Award for Best Picture in 2007.

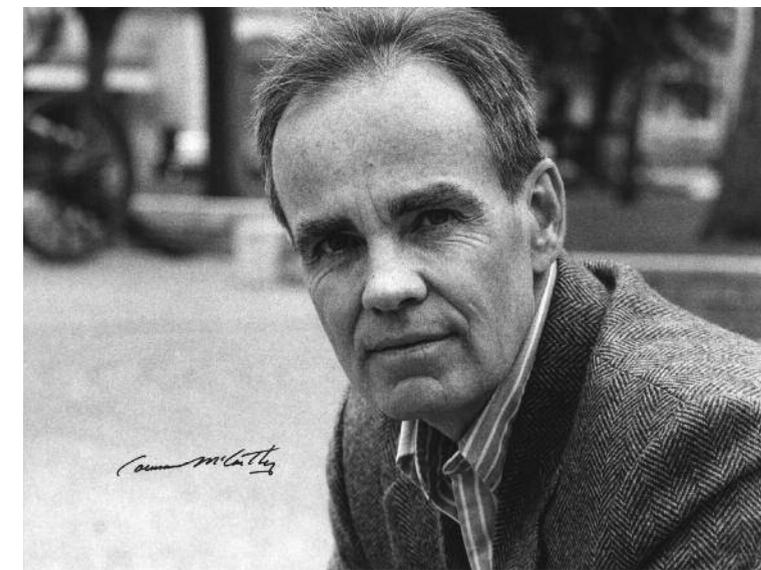

"One interesting thing about McCarthy's early screenplay is that the ending is very different from the novel," said Davis. "In the screenplay, Llewelyn Moss survives and he joins Sheriff Bell in a climactic gun battle against the Chigurh character."

In addition to highlights from the archive, the display includes numerous foreign editions of McCarthy's work, which show the author's worldwide impact. Also on view are many of the critical works published about McCarthy over the years, as well as articles on McCarthy from Texas Monthly and Rolling Stone.

Cormac McCarthy: Selections from the Permanent Collection coincides with the 25th anniversary of the publication of his novel, Blood Meridian. The Cormac McCarthy Society will be holding its annual conference at the Wittliff Collections in late October, and the public is invited to the exhibition reception and keynote speech for the conference, a talk by McCarthy scholar and artist Peter Josyph on October 28. Admission is free. (See the sidebar, right).

Several related collections, including Woolmer's correspondence with the author, complement the Cormac McCarthy Papers. All are processed and available for research; inventories are online: www.thewittliffcollections.txstate.edu/research/a-z/mccarthy.html. ★

JOIN US THURSDAY, OCTOBER 28

The Cormac McCarthy exhibition reception and program will feature a talk by PETER JOSYPH. A filmmaker, writer, actor, and painter, Josyph co-directed Acting McCarthy: The Making of Billy Bob Thornton's "All the Pretty Horses," which examines the art of acting in relation to literature. Josyph's latest work, Adventures in Reading Cormac McCarthy (The Scarecrow Press, September 2010), considers at length two of McCarthy's masterworks, Blood Meridian and Suttree, as well as the novel and film of All the Pretty Horses, McCarthy's play The Stonemason, and his film The Gardener's Son. Drawing on multiple resources of an unconventional nature, Josyph examines McCarthy's work from original and sometimes provocative perspectives. More about Josyph's work, including his series of paintings All the Pretty Horses and Cormac McCarthy's House, is at www.peterjosyph.com. Thursday, October 28 6:00 pm Reception 7:00 pm Program Admission is free. Attendees are asked to RSVP to southwesternwriters@txstate.edu.

FRANCISCO
MATA ROSAS

Born in Mexico City in 1958, Francisco Mata Rosas received his degree in photo-journalism in the early 1980s. His photography has appeared in many publications, including the New York Times, the Los Angeles Times, La Jornada, Milenio, Reforma, the Independent Magazine, Photography (London), and El Paseante (Spain). He has received numerous honors including the 1988 Prize of Acquisition at the Biennial of Mexican Photography, the Prize of Honor at the Bicentennial of the French Revolution in 1989, and the Third Annual Mother Jones Photography Award in 1993. His books include Sábado de Gloria (Grupo Deseo, 1994) and Litorales (Centro de la Imagen, 2000), a collaborative project with Eniac Martínez Ulloa using plastic cameras to photograph Mexico's coastal regions. México, Tenochtitlán (Fondo, 2005) is his monumental work on Mexico City, where he lives. Currently Mata Rosas is working on a project covering the U.S.-Mexico border, researching the hybridization of cultures between the countries. More at www.francisco mata.com.mx.

JOURNALIST BILLY PORTERFIELD DONATES ARCHIVE

Billy Porterfield, the Texas journalist and award-winning author of several books, donated his major archive to the Wittliff Collections earlier this year. During a career that spanned more than 50 years, he became a major voice at leading Texas newspapers with 5.4 million words in print and broadcast. Porterfield wrote for the Houston Chronicle, the Detroit Free Press, the Chicago Daily News, the Dallas Times Herald, and the Austin American-Statesman, and he worked with Jim Lehrer at KERA-TV in Dallas on Lehrer's nightly news program. Porterfield also produced and narrated several prize-winning documentaries for public television. In 1967, he became the first writer selected for the prestigious Dobie-Paisano Fellowship. His books include LBJ Country (1965), A Loose Herd of Texans (1978), Texas Rhapsody: Memories of a Native Son (1981), The Greatest Honky-Tonks in Texas (1983), and Diddy Waw Diddy: The Passage of an American Son (1994).

WRITERS' JOURNALS OFFER an irresistible opportunity to join a creative thinker in musing on the events—whether in daily life or on a global scale—that shape our lives. In her new book, An Extraordinary Year of Ordinary Days, author and best-selling mystery novelist Susan Wittig Albert invites us to revisit one of the most tumultuous years in the last decade, 2008.

new in the southwestern writers collection BOOK SERIES

In this most recent title in the Southwestern Writers Collection Book Series from UT Press, Albert's journal entries provide an engaging account of how 365 seemingly ordinary days can lead to major changes in how one views the world.

As Albert blends her work as a writer with her rural life in the Texas Hill Country and the Sangre de Cristo Mountains of New Mexico, her eclectic daily reading ranges across topics from economics, food production, and oil and energy policy to poetry, place, and the writing life.

Albert becomes increasingly concerned about the natural world and the threats facing it, especially climate change and resource depletion. Asking herself, "What does it mean? And what ought I do about it?", she determines practical steps to take, such as growing more food in her garden, and she also helps us as readers make sense of these issues and consider what our own responses might be.

Susan Wittig Albert's previous books in the Wittliff's Southwestern Writers Collection Book Series are Together, Alone: A Memoir of Marriage and Place and (as co-editor) What Wildness Is This: Women Write About the Southwest. More about Albert's work is at www.susanalbert.com. ★

the Academy Award-winning screenwriter and director from Texas. Projects represented by scripts, production and publicity materials, photographs, and set designs include Kramer vs. Kramer, Still of the Night, Places in the Heart, Billy Bathgate, and Nobody's Fool.

Choctaw Nation member RON QUERRY is the acclaimed author of the novels The Death of Bernadette Lefthand and Bad Medicine, which depict the intersection of white and native worlds. Of Querry's writing, Tony Hillerman said, "The Death of Bernadette Lefthand should rank among the classics of American fiction." Querry's papers include notes, drafts, and other materials relating to these novels and his other writings, as well as Querry's personal correspondence, photographs, and subject files.

JACK JACKSON, also known as JAXON, is widely considered the author of the first underground comic to be sold, "God Nose." Later in his career, he found success as an illustrator and author of historical fiction. That work forms the bulk of this collection and includes research material, drafts, and illustrations for his titles, including Columbus, Imaginary Kingdom: Texas As Seen by the Rivera & Rubi Military Expeditions, and Shooting the Sun: Cartographic Results of Military Activities in Texas.

The finding aids for these and all of the Wittliff's processed collections are available through the A-Z Guide to Collections in the new Research section of the website. ★

HANDS-ON experience for public history students

THREE IMPORTANT ARCHIVES are now fully processed and open for research, thanks to graduate students in Texas State's Public History program. Last fall, the students completed arranging and inventorying these holdings, under the guidance of Lead Archivist Katie Salzmans, as part of their coursework in archives management. Working in groups of four, they applied what they learned in readings and in class to make the Robert Benton, Ron Querry, and Jack Jackson collections available to a wider audience.

The ROBERT BENTON Papers document the career of writers on writing RICK RIORDAN

RICK RIORDAN is the author of the #1 New York Times bestselling Percy Jackson and the Olympians series for children and the multi award-winning Tres Navarre mystery series for adults.

The Percy Jackson series features a twelve-year-old dyslexic boy who discovers he is the modern-day son of a Greek god. Riordan's first book in that series, The Lightning Thief, was a New York Times Notable Book for 2005 and became a major motion picture in 2010. The five books in the series—now with millions of copies sold—have turned an entire generation on to Greek mythology.

Riordan taught middle-school English at Saint Mary's Hall in San Antonio for many years, and in 2002 he was honored with the school's first Master Teacher Award. He now writes full-time. He is also the author of The 39 Clues: The Maze of Bones. His newest series is the Kane Chronicles, which involves Egyptian mythology and premiered in 2010 with the release of The Red Pyramid.

Riordan began donating his literary papers to the Wittliff Collections in 2004 (see p. 14 for recent additions). He has participated in Wittliff events, and he is a featured author in the Southwestern Writers Collection book series anthology, Lone Star Sleuths: Mystery / Detective Fiction from Texas. Riordan recently visited with Curator Steve Davis to talk about his writing.

★ Did you always know you wanted to be a writer? How did you get started?

I wrote a lot of short stories when I was young, and my very first rejection note was from Isaac Asimov Science Fiction Magazine in 1978, when I was 14. My mother saved this for years, and brought it out after I got published.

I was never serious about writing in college. I focused most of my creative energy on music, and was lead singer in a folk rock band, if you can believe it.

After college, I became a teacher, and was quite happy with the idea of doing that the rest of my life. However, I read a lot of mystery books in my spare time, and when my wife and I moved to San Francisco, I started missing Texas.

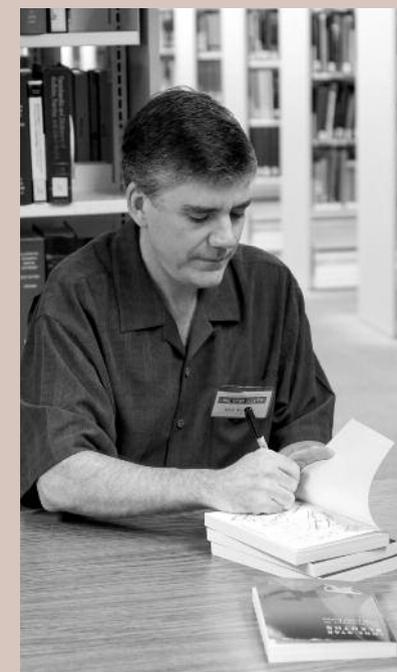

I decided, on a lark, that I would try writing a hard-boiled private eye novel set in my hometown of San Antonio. Ten months later, Big Red Tequila was finished.

The strange thing is, I had a feeling that Big Red Tequila was going to get published. It just felt different than anything else I'd ever written, because the novel had practically forced me to write it. The idea took me by the throat and wouldn't let me go until the manuscript was done.

I tell aspiring writers that you have to find what you MUST write. For me, that meant getting away from home for a while and learning to appreciate what I knew, before I could follow the old axiom, "Write about what you know."

★ How is writing a children's book different from writing an adult book?

You know, when I was writing Percy Jackson, I didn't find it much different than writing an adult Tres Navarre novel. I think kids want the same thing from a book that adults want—a fast-paced story, characters worth caring

STAFF HONORED

In May, Lead Archivist Katie Salzmans received the Alkek Library's highest honor, the Employee Excellence Award. Other Wittliff staff awarded this honor include Michele Miller (2003) and Steve Davis (2009), as well as our catalogers, Karen Sigler and Joe Sumner (2005). Katie provides excellent leadership and management of the Wittliff's archives, and she consistently goes "above and beyond," helping with exhibitions and donors. Katie also teaches classes and presents at scholarly conferences. Everyone who works with Katie praises her humor, intelligence, optimism, and leadership, and we are so pleased to see her recognized with this high honor. Also this year, Joel Minor and Katie Salzmans both won Information Technology Division Honors Awards at Texas State. Events Assistant Amy Cochran received a Staff Performance Award recognizing her work managing the 81 events we hosted during the first year after our grand reopening.

BITTERSWEET HARVEST

The Bracero Program was a guest-worker initiative created by President Franklin Roosevelt that spanned the years 1942-1964 when millions of Mexican agricultural workers crossed the border to work in more than half of the states in America. February 25 through April 29, 2011, the Wittliff Collections and Texas State's Public History Program will co-present this traveling exhibition from the Smithsonian Institution, which explores the braceros' contributions to communities in Mexico and the United States, the opportunities that became available to them, and the challenges they faced as guest workers during the war years and afterward. The exhibition will include 15 free-standing banners with oral histories, quotes, and photographs by Leonard Nadel, whose images inspired the Smithsonian's work on Bittersweet Harvest. For more information, visit the Bracero History Archive online at www.braceroarchive.org.

Friday, February 25: A public reception and program will feature guest speaker Kristine Navarro, director of the Institute of Oral History at UTEP. Watch the Wittliff's online events calendar for details.

PAINTED LIGHT

KATE BREAKEY is internationally recognized for her large-scale, richly hand-colored photographs, including Small Deaths, her acclaimed portrait series of birds, flowers, animals, and insects. Breakey's new exhibition, Painted Light, is the first career retrospective of her luminous work. With over 130 selections from nine suites of photographs, including Remains, Principles of Mathematics, Laws of Physics, Loose Ends, Cactus, and Memories & Dreams, this show encompasses a quarter-century of prolific image-making and reveals the range of the artist's creative explorations. The Wittliff holds the major archive of Breakey's work, and this exhibition, part of FOTOSEPTIEMBRE USA, celebrates her second book in the Wittliff's Southwestern & Mexican Photography Series, published this October by UT Press. Painted Light is on view through February 4, 2011. Join us November 6 for the reception and book launch. ★

FROM PAINTED LIGHT:

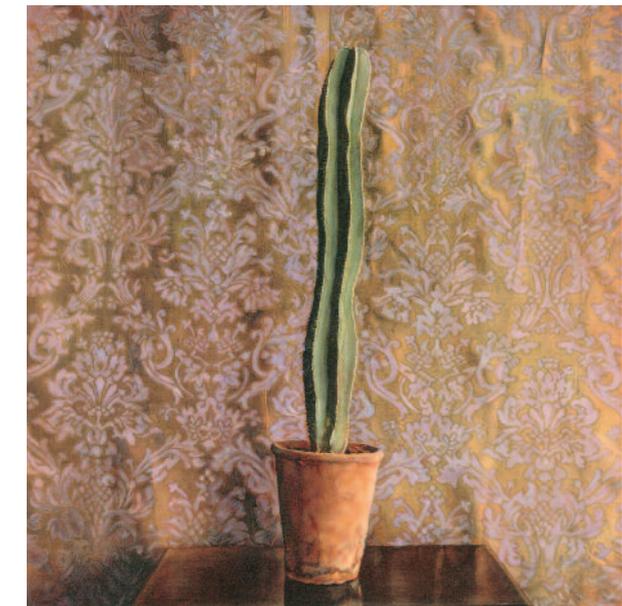

I started painting on photographs in 1978.... Printmaking was a painstaking meditative process; it taught you patience, and so did hand-coloring photographs. It suited me, and it was sensuous.

I saw right away that something interesting happened when you put paint on the surface of a photograph. It was changed in ways that have more to do with our recognition and expectation than anything else. Photographs have certain inherent properties as reliable documents, as visual evidence you can trust. (This is no longer the case since computers gave us Photoshop.) By painting on that surface, exaggerating, embellishing, adding your own personal expressive gestures, you are changing the photograph's integrity and credibility. You can do this slightly, gently skew reality a bit, or keep adding paint until you confuse the issue—significantly blurring boundaries, so that the image is caught between being a painting and a photograph, because no matter how much paint you add to the surface, the photographic qualities are always still there, perceptible under that surface. Either way, you want to look again, to search for clues, to see what is and isn't real, what is fact and what is fiction.

There's another reason I love to paint on photographs. If photographing something makes you see and pay attention, coloring it afterward—rendering it—makes you pay closer attention yet. You get to know every last detail, every shadow and edge. It makes you and that image intimate....

Once an idea is set in motion and the first images are made (or sometimes the other way around), a series is started that can never be finished. It's reassuring to know that since all thoughts are incomplete, ideas evolve and change—I change—the series can be revisited, added to indefinitely. This slow accumulation of images over half a lifetime—whether it's the little cactus plants on my windowsill, the dead creatures found in the desert, or the flowering plants that come up in my backyard—become like a disjointed diary of my enduring fascinations, a history of my devotion to the idea that there are endless unique things to look at and record. — KATE BREAKEY

recent ACQUISITIONS

the SOUTHWESTERN WRITERS COLLECTION

The Collection currently comprises over 6,550 linear feet of materials from the region's authors, screenwriters, and songwriters. Recent acquisitions listed below represent archives additions from February through July 2010. Not listed are the numerous gifts of books, magazines, films, CDs, and other supplementary materials. The success of the Southwestern Writers Collection depends on the generous support of our donors. Thank you! ★ In 1860, ROBERT HANCOCK HUNTER wrote a lively reminiscence of his early days growing up in Texas and his experiences in the Texas Revolution. In 1966, the text of that memoir was one of the earliest publications by Bill and Sally Wittliff's Encino Press. This small collection includes two signed, handwritten versions of his narrative, correspondence concerning his life, and other material related to his family. It comes directly from Hunter's descendants. ★ Eight hundred and seventy-seven recordings—including LPs, 45s, audio cassettes, VHS cassettes, CDs and DVDs—form the WILLIE NELSON Recording Collection. Included are pieces created under Nelson's leadership as well as tapings on which he is a guest musician, producer, or songwriter (see p. 3). ★ The archive of BILLY PORTERFIELD, Texas journalist, teacher, and award-winning author of several books, documents his prolific writing career (see p. 10). Porterfield's 50+ years in journalism included writing for the Houston Chronicle, the Dallas Times Herald, and the Austin American-Statesman. A selection of his published books includes LBJ Country, A Loose Herd of Texans, and Diddy Waw Diddy: The Passage of an American Son. [Gift of Porterfield] ★ RON QUERRY, whose papers have now been formally processed (see p. 10) donated additional photographs, correspondence, and notes. [Gift of Querry] ★ Austin's RAW DEAL restaurant, co-owned by Fletcher Boone and Jim Smitham, served simple Texas fare such as pork chops and fries washed down with cold beer. The casual atmosphere of this local watering hole was a favorite with writers and politicians in the 1970s and 1980s. Framed snapshots of many regulars adorned the walls, and these now form the bulk of this collection.

INSTRUCTING ILLUMINATING INSPIRING

Committed to furthering the cultural legacy of the region's literary and photographic arts and to fostering "the spirit of place" in the wider world, the Wittliff Collections welcome visitors, tours, and classes, host readings, lectures, and symposia, assist researchers, and present major exhibitions year 'round from archival holdings. The Southwestern Writers Collection acquires, preserves, and makes available literary papers and artifacts from the Southwest's leading writers, filmmakers, and musicians. The Southwestern & Mexican Photography Collection focuses on the Southwest and Mexico, and houses one of the largest archives of modern and contemporary Mexican photography in the U.S.

Notable subjects include Billy Lee Brammer, Gary Cartwright, Jim Hightower, Mike Levy, Ann Richards, and Bill Wittliff. [Gift of Lily Boone] ★ Additions to the RICK RIORDAN Archive demonstrate the wide-spread appeal of his Percy Jackson and the Olympians series through letters and photographs sent by fans, awards, t-shirts and other promotional items, and editions of the novels translated into Chinese, Dutch, French, German, Hebrew, Hungarian, Japanese, Korean, and Spanish. See our interview with Riordan on p. 11. [Gift of Riordan] ★ Poet, essayist, and memoirist MIRIAM SAGAN lives, writes, and teaches in Santa Fe. Her literary archive documents her varied career as author of over a dozen books that include Searching for a Mustard Seed: A Young Widow's Unconventional Story. Sagan is a founding member of the collaborative press Tres Chicas Books. [Gift of Sagan] ★ Notes on Blood Meridian author, JOHN SEPICH, continues to add to his extensive collection on Cormac McCarthy. [Gift of Sepich] ★ Historian MARC SIMMONS' interest in the arts, culture, and architecture of New Mexico is reflected in additional research files, correspondence, manuscripts, and published materials. [Gift of Simmons] ★ Additions to the records of the TEXAS INSTITUTE OF LETTERS include meeting minutes, reports, and awards information. [Gift of Dave Hamrick] ★ In 1968 the ENCINO PRESS published LARRY McMURTRY's book of essays, In a Narrow Grave. A recent addition to the Encino archive includes galleys, page proofs, and a broadside promoting the book. [Gift of Bill & Sally Wittliff] ★

from the ARCHIVES

WRITTEN ON TWO pages of a little spiral-bound memo book in the papers of CHARLES BOWDEN are glimpses of what would become a watershed article and book in Bowden's career as an uncompromising investigative reporter, social commentator, and visionary writer.

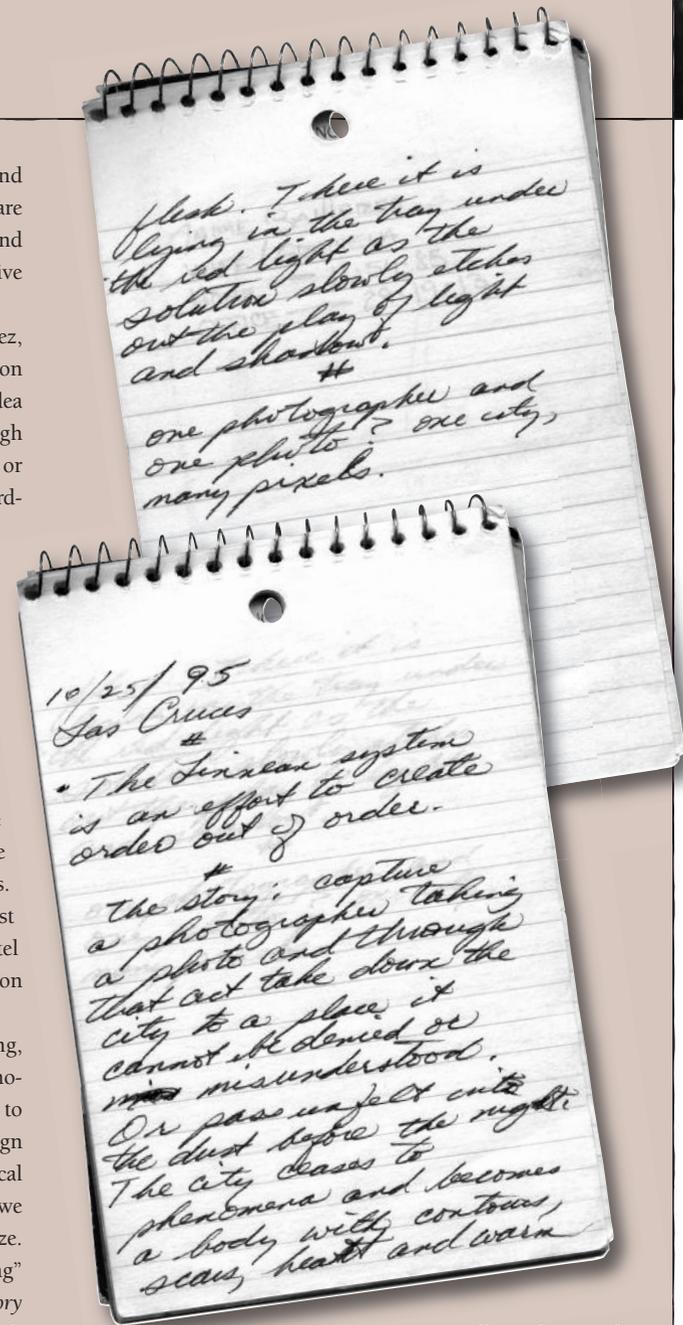

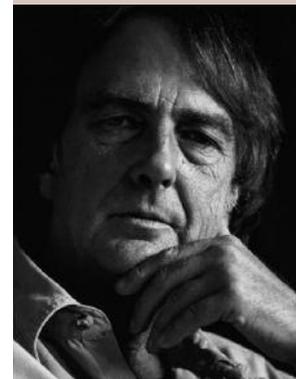

In the fall of 1995, Bowden headed for Ciudad Juárez, Mexico, just across the Rio Grande from El Paso, Texas, on assignment for Harper's magazine. As his notes show, his idea was to "capture a photographer taking a photo and through that act take down the city to a place it cannot be denied or misunderstood." What resulted was a graphic and hard-hitting article, titled "While You Were Sleeping," published in December 1996, about not just one Juárez street photographer but the 13 who risked their lives chasing the horrific whirlwinds of poverty, pollution, and violence ripping through their city.

In 1998, the Harper's article became the foundation for Juárez: The Laboratory of Our Future, a collaborative Aperture book between Bowden and the street photographers, with a preface by Noam Chomsky and afterword by Eduardo Galeano. For almost anyone who read the article or book, including residents of Juárez, these were the first views of the graphic and disturbing photographs. Outside Juárez, including El Paso, these were the first intimate accounts of the ravishes of globalization, cartel battles, senseless violence, and the War on Drugs going on just across our border. But from the beginning, Bowden saw in these photographers' images a way to turn the city from a foreign phenomena into a physical and spiritual plight that we all intuitively can recognize. "While You Were Sleeping" and Juárez: The Laboratory of Our Future didn't mark Bowden's first foray into border issues or his first collaboration with photograppers, but they signified the beginning of an obsession over Ciudad Juárez as a "laboratory of our future." Books that followed were his celebrated Down by the River in 2002, and Dreamland and Murder City: Ciudad Juárez and the Global Economy's New Killing Fields, both published this year. By turns scathing social commentary, poetic rumination, and first-hand narrative, all these works represent one man's fearless attempts to open our eyes to realities we would rather ignore—realities that we ignore at our own peril.

Based in Las Cruces, New Mexico, and the author of 26 books and counting (an anthology, The Charles Bowden Reader, is being published by UT Press this September), as well as a legion of magazine and newspaper articles, Charles Bowden is something of a borderland prophet—"America's most alarming writer," as novelist Jim Harrison puts it—out to crush our many misconceptions with his elegant and addictive style, but only because he wants us to do better.

The Wittliff Collections are privileged to have acquired the correspondence, drafts, research materials, photographs, and other papers of a journalist who will surely be studied long after he stops writing. The archive, which will be processed in early 2011, measures 75 linear feet and spans Bowden's life and work up into 2008. In such an archive, of a writer known for both stream-of-consciousness introspection and thorough research, one who can seamlessly sew the subjective and objective together, there are many more traces hidden here to follow, waiting to be discovered. ★
