Major of the Month
Fashion Merchandising

Fashion Merchandising majors explore all areas of fashion from manufacturing to retailing and investigate a variety of products from concept to consumer. Fashion Merchandising graduates are prepared for a variety of careers in fashion marketing and sales, retail management, buying and promotions. Majors are required to complete a business administration minor to enhance their preparation for the fashion industry.

Fashion Merchandising majors benefit from a variety of resources. The program faculty members have substantial academic and professional work experience in retailing; and the program receives strong industry support through the Fashion Merchandising Development Board.

Check out http://www.fcs.txstate.edu/degrees-programs/fm.html for this and more information about this major. More information can be found on the Undergraduate Catalog at http://www.txstate.edu/curriculumservices/catalogs/undergraduate/catalogs.html

Class Examples:
Introduction to Fashion Merchandising (FM 1330)
Textiles (FM 1332)
Gender, Appearance, and Society (FM 2335)

Resource of the Month:
NSE: National Student Exchange

National Student Exchange is a study-away opportunity for students to take new courses, see new places, and enroll in academic opportunities that may not be available on their own campus. You can study for a single term or an academic year at one of 200 NSE member colleges and universities in the United States, Canada, Puerto Rico, and the US Virgin Islands. A student has the option for Resident (In-State) rates for tuition and fees for up to one year during their exchange.

By participating in the National Student Exchange program, you can enjoy new places and experiences while exploring new areas of study. You can find this information and learn more about the program at the Texas States National Student Exchange website: http://www.txstate.edu/ucollege/programs/nse/
