Honoring our building donors . . .

Elevating the fine arts at Texas State has become a priority for the University and the College of Fine Arts and Communication. Helping us with this priority are our generous donors. Through their gifts the new performing arts center is quickly becoming a reality that will not only reposition the arts on the campus, but help the college recruit the country’s most talented faculty and students.

New friends to Texas State are Joseph “Joe” and Sharon Lockett who moved here three years ago from Washington D.C. Joe is a retired Naval Captain and Sharon is a classically trained cellist. Because of their love for the arts, they looked to Texas State for opportunities to attend fine arts performances.

The Locketts became dedicated supporters almost immediately. According to Sharon and Joe, “we are long-time supporters of the educational values that come through arts training and education, including music, (develops mathematical ability) drama, (enhances self-esteem and expression) and dance, (combining athletics and art). We recognize that these are a part of the fabric of a healthy community.”

We salute and thank Joe and Sharon Lockett!
Parking will be fee based and open to the public. If you are coming to campus to visit the Theatre Center or JC Kellam buildings, you will need to use Edward Gary Street.

The new Performing Arts Center will feature two beautifully designed donor walls. One wall will showcase donors who have given $25,000 and above for the construction of the new Performing Arts Center. The other wall will feature all cumulative gifts to the College of Fine Arts and Communication at $25,000 and above. Having a college donor wall will allow us to recognize and acknowledge donors who have made significant contributions to the college.

According to dean Timothy Mottet, “the walls in the Performing Arts Center will assist us with stewardship and give us a place to periodically meet and celebrate existing and new donors who have made major financial contributions.”

If you would like to learn more about your current level of giving to the College of Fine Arts and Communication or make a gift to the building fund, please contact our Major Gifts Officer, Ms. Vicki Clarke who can help to guide you to making a lasting gift. You can reach Vicki at 512.245.2396 or email at vm06@txstate.edu.
