Spring 2013: Training Workshop for SHRM Students and Veterans

In April, the Texas State University student chapter of the Society for Human Resource Management (SHRM) conducted another Interview Training Workshop. This rigorous and feedback-intensive workshop helps student participants develop and sharpen their interviewing skills on both sides of the table. SHRM co-advisors Drs. Rob Konopaske and Kay Nicols, along with SHRM alumna advisor Brittany Bowden and SHRM chapter president Ashlee Simpson, planned, coordinated, and conducted the event.

Expanding its reach, the workshop organizers recruited several student veterans from the McCoy College of Business Administration. During the first phase of the training program, the veterans (interviewees) received a refresher on how to effectively prepare for and sell themselves during an interview. A primary goal of the training was to help veterans translate and package their relevant skills from the military to a civilian job context. In a separate training session, SHRM students (interviewers) were instructed on all stages of developing, conducting, and scoring a professional, structured interview.

Phase two of the Interview Training Workshop took place one week later in the Management conference room and consisted of SHRM students interviewing student veterans. The interviews occurred one at a time and were video recorded. After each interview was completed, 3 expert observers (who sat in the back of the room) provided detailed, constructive, and customized feedback to each interviewer and interviewee. In the days following the interview simulations, each participant was given a free DVD copy so they could analyze and improve upon their performance for future interviews.

Drs. Brian Miller and Rob Konopaske's article, entitled "Dispositional predictors of perceived work entitlement," was recently accepted for publication in the Journal of Managerial Psychology. They found, in two independent samples of employed college students, that high levels of certain components of Machiavellianism (like amorality) and low levels of work ethic are significantly related to the perception of entitlement at work. Entitlement is the belief that one is deserving of more rewards than others regardless of how well they do or do not perform to earn those rewards.
