Sardine Can Yields Sister Rules for Red Sabotage in U.S.

The San Antonio Express presents the first installment of an exclusive story on the activities of Soviet spies in the U.S. The story is based on information from a source who claims to have been a member of the espionage ring and a former member of the S.A.R. (San Antonio Red) network. The source, who goes by the code name "Sardine," claims to have been a member of the group for several years and has been able to provide detailed information about the group's activities.

Sardine reveals that the group used a network of secret agents to carry out their operations. They would meet at designated locations, such as the Sardine Can, to exchange information and plan their next moves. The group's activities included theft, espionage, and sabotage, with the goal of disrupting the U.S. economy and spreading fear and panic among the population.

The story is based on information provided by a former member of the group who claims to have been able to escape and provide detailed information about the group's activities. The story is being published in installments, with each installment providing new insights into the group's operations and activities.
