

Spring 2017: HIST 4350X
Peace and Nonviolence Movements
MW 2:00-3:20 pm

Dr. Rebecca Montgomery and Dr. Leah Renold

This course explores the origins, development, and impact of peace and nonviolence movements globally. It will examine the roles that religion, class, gender, race, ethnicity, and nationalism have played in shaping social and political perceptions of injustice and public attitudes toward movement goals.

In addition to examining the religious and cultural traditions underlying peace and nonviolence philosophies, students will analyze the historical factors and developments that gave rise to movements in the United States, Latin America, Eastern Europe, India, and South Africa.

NOTE: This is a new course that will not initially show up in the course offerings on CatsWeb, but it will be offered in the spring, so check back later if you don't see it.
