

"A Body in Motion: Movement and Its Consequences for Wildlife Ecology"

The movement of animals is a problem for many phenomena, but the fundamental ecology and methodology of animal movement is still a relatively uncharted field. In this talk, Dr. Street will talk about his experiences with quantitative ecology, movement, and niche modeling, while introducing new technologies and associated analytical techniques for the simultaneous study of animal movement, behavior, and emergent distributions.