Lady Bird Johnson, in a rare appearance at a Texas college, will be the keynote speaker at the University of Texas at Austin this week. She will speak in the main auditorium of the Student Union at 10 a.m. today. Lady Bird Johnson is the wife of President Lyndon B. Johnson and is well-known for her work in the White House and for her efforts to promote environmental causes.

In addition to her role as First Lady, Lady Bird Johnson has been a strong advocate for conservation and environmental issues. She has worked to protect natural resources, promote recycling, and raise awareness about the importance of preserving the environment. Her efforts have earned her the titles of "Mother of the Environment" and "First Lady of Conservation." Lady Bird Johnson's speech at the University of Texas marks a significant event, as it highlights her commitment to the importance of education and the role of universities in promoting sustainability.

As a part of her speech, Lady Bird Johnson is expected to discuss the importance of environmental conservation, the role of higher education in fostering a sustainable future, and the significance of the University of Texas in addressing these issues. Her address will be followed by a Q&A session, where students and faculty will have the opportunity to engage with her on these important topics.

The event is open to the public, and the Student Union is located on the University of Texas campus. Attendees are encouraged to attend and participate in this important conversation about the future of our planet.
