This Fall, 2018 marks my first year as Director of the Center and I am pleased to share what we have been doing last summer and this semester. We were happy to welcome our first Coverdell Fellow, Mohammed Hassan-Issa, who served the Peace Corp in South Africa. The Center thanks the Graduate College and the Wilson Endowment for supporting Coverdell students, where Peace Corp returnees have the opportunity to pursue graduate work in International Studies. In addition to receiving students with International backgrounds, the Center continues its outreach, with several International Studies students on scholarship or pursuing internships abroad: Wil Slade worked with an organization called the “Light and Leadership Initiative in Peru,” Alfredo Ramirez completed a Boren Fellowship in Brazil and studied Portuguese at the University of Chicago in summer 2017, and at the Universidad Federal de Santa Catarina in Florianópolis, Brazil, in fall 2017 and spring 2018, while Nakia Edmond was Texas State’s first recipient of a Critical Language Scholarship and pursued her studies in China, and Pablo Gomez worked for “Fundacion Compartir,” which focuses on bridging the gap in rural education in Colombia. The Center is very proud of all them.

Meanwhile, in its ongoing efforts to further cross-campus collaboration among the faculty, the Center was pleased to recognize a record fifteen Honorary Professors of International Studies from ten different departments and five Colleges. Honorary Professors at the Center must be Full Professors and pursue research and teaching that furthers the internationalization of research and curriculum.

It is our students, however, who continue to be the driving force of the Center. The International Studies Club and the Honor Society, Pi Gamma Mu, have been holding joint meetings every week, enjoying record attendance, and hosting guest speakers on topics such as United States-Latin American relations; and the role of immigration in international relations, among other topics. They have also hosted student speakers and gained insight from their international peers on topics such as the history and culture of Persia. As a testament to how active and involved our students have been, the Texas State International Studies Club was recently recognized by the National Chapter of Pi Gamma Mu for increasing membership by over twenty percent.

The Center host top academics and professionals on international topics of immediate relevance. Last Spring the Center, in conjunction with the Center for the Study of the Southwest and the Development Office at Texas State invited several prominent Mexican and US scholars for a “U.S.-Mexico Summit” to explore the implications of the recent Presidential elections in Mexico.

Many thanks to our generous benefactors and donors, including everyone from alumni to friends and Board members of the Center. Thank you for your continued interest and support, and stay in touch. – Paul Hart

STUDENT SPOTLIGHT

Texas State Coverdell Fellow Mohamed Hassan-Issa

The Center for International Studies awarded Texas State's first Coverdell Fellowship to Mohamed Hassan-Issa. The Paul D. Coverdell Fellowship program offers financial assistance to returned Peace Corps Volunteers (RPCV) pursuing graduate degrees. Below Mohamed discusses his time in the Peace Corps and his journey to Texas State:

During my service in the Peace Corps, I was posted as an English Teacher and educational specialist to South Africa, where I learned to overcome serious language and cultural barriers to integrate myself into the rural community which I inhabited, and established professional relations with my co-teachers, community elders and School Management Teams. A beautifully diverse country, with no shortage of acute developmental challenges, my experience living and working in South Africa provided a period of serious personal growth via my fieldwork experience. My work experience didn't only extend to teaching but to the greater Peace Corps South Africa community. During my service I was elected as a member and chairperson of the Peace Corps Volunteer Advisory Committee (VAC). The role of VAC is to advocate for policy and procedure reforms, inform and advise staff about volunteer issues and inform volunteers about policy decisions and staff perspectives. As the chairperson of VAC, I served as the principal liaison for the country director. My duties included facilitating communication and understanding between volunteers, staff, and host-country nationals.

My experience made me realize, more than ever, that despite the dip in international perceptions of our great nation that our foundations are as strong as they have ever been, and we remain to the vast majority of the world’s inhabitants that shining city on the hill. Seeing my beautiful, frustrating home nation after a period abroad- a luxury too few in the United States get to experience for themselves- has only strengthened my conviction that it would be a privilege to be part of the American world narrative- as well as to, in even a small way, shape that narrative at a time when it is being contested at home and abroad.

Texas State University’s International Studies graduate program is a strong fit for me because of the unique interdisciplinary structure of the major. As a graduate of Franklin and Marshall College, I had the opportunity during my four years of undergraduate study to create my own course of study as a Special Studies major- permitting me to combine courses in Arabic, History and Government so I could chart my journey through the relevant and exciting intersections of these critical bodies of knowledge. I hope to pursue a career in diplomacy one day.
Geoff Sloan - International Relations

I’m studying abroad in Oslo, Norway. I’m completing my International Studies course work and coming back to graduate in 2019. This isn’t my first time abroad or even in Norway but it’s my first time living outside Texas. The opportunity to live with family-friends that I’ve known my entire life is what brought me to Oslo for my study abroad adventures. These folks have hosted previous members of my family and now it’s my turn to live, work and study in Scandinavia.

Not only am I wrapping up my course work in International Studies at the University of Oslo, but I’m also working with Oslo Business Region, a subsidiary of the city of Oslo focused on promoting businesses in Oslo and hosting Oslo Innovation Week.

For more information on my time abroad, stay up to date at the University Star http://star.txstate.edu/category/news/norway/
