Texas State University participated in the Chronicle of Higher Education’s “Great Places to Work” survey last year for the first time in many years. Although our survey results were mostly positive, we did not score high enough to be recognized as one of the best places to work in higher education across the country. When I see national polls and surveys like this that come out from time to time, I often wonder what makes certain places a “great place to work.”

The criteria used in one survey to the next often varies, but there do seem to be several topics that recur time and time again. Many of those recurring criteria will come as no surprise. They include things like pay, benefits, time off, services available to employees, and workplace location.

While there is a lot to be said about each of the criteria listed above, I want to focus here on the more nebulous concept of organizational, or shared, culture. The notion of culture frequently shows up in these surveys but is rarely well-defined or explained. Even the Society for Human Resources Management, an organization...

SPOTLIGHT ON HUMAN RESOURCES

The Office of Human Resources is riding a wave of change and opportunity, which brings new goals, major projects and exciting challenges. One of these changes include the recent celebrations of the retirements of several long-time team members, including Jeff Lund, Marsha Moore, Bobbie Brandenburg, and Margie Cameron. We also celebrated the promotion and reclassification of existing team members into new roles and the hiring of new teammates.

Coupled with these staff changes include the advancement of big projects. In the last edition of HR's spotlight article for the FSS Newsletter, Vice President of the division, Eric Algoe, mentioned the pursuit of some major HR goals tied to an ambitious agenda. Here's a look at goals and major projects for each of our core areas that are currently underway.

Benefits

The Benefits team led by Heather Houston is collaborating with IT to develop a Total Compensation Statement in SAP Employee Self-Service to provide employees an illustration of the dollar value of their benefits in addition to salary. This tool will provide a breakdown of the many components, the dollar value of each, and calculate benefits as a percentage of the total pay package.

Additionally, an Exit Interview project team is evaluating and developing a more comprehensive process to collect information on why employees choose to leave Texas State. This data collection and analysis will help management identify trends and potential solutions for retaining top talent.

Compensation

The Compensation team led by Blake Bissing, is currently working on the job title consolidation project - a positive new direction for staff classification for the University and staff employees. The project will:

- Facilitate implementation of the Job Profile Builder software application to further streamline our performance management system
- Improve the staff pay plan classification system and pay plan structure
- Allow for better targeted and accurate labor market comparison studies
- Result in implementation of a more accurate credentialing system which will improve the accuracy and quality of our employment system

Development and Communications

A first for the Office of Human Resources was the merge between two teams: Communication and Professional Development, now led by Vanessa Salazar. The organizational restructure creates many new opportunities, including rebranding of the area and streamlining the way courses and other learning opportunities are promoted, including a new semester course catalog and monthly emails announcing upcoming learning and training opportunities.

Other goals for the team include:

- Reorganizing the current learning categories
- Providing holistic training and learning opportunities that focus on enhancing competencies tied to performance management
- Exploring how to provide web-based training and streaming capabilities through Zoom.

Employment

Under the direction of LynnAnn Brewer, Employment is transitioning toward a more proactive and consultative approach to talent acquisition. To support moving in this new direction, HR Employment team members have obtained their Professional Recruiter Certifications.

HR Employment is currently collaborating with university partners on projects such as the PeopleAdmin data integration and NetID Release project. The mission of this project is to improve the new employee onboarding process and simplify communication between the two teams.

FSS DIVERSITY

Early in 2018, Starbucks experienced an incredibly difficult situation at one of its many stores. The incident challenged the company’s image that speaks to equity, sensitivity and cultural awareness. Always at the forefront on many social issues, Starbucks’ response would be critical to its future.

Taking responsibility, Starbucks aggressively addressed the situation on many levels. One aspect of the response was to temporarily close stores and conduct training to address racism and racial bias. While it is unlikely that one afternoon of training would have a meaningful impact, the company’s commitment to change was evident and important.

We should take note of the decisive response but also the importance placed on diversity training. It should be a critical part of any company’s strategic plan. The training promotes inclusivity and battles discrimination, ensuring safety and comfort. It demonstrates that a company values equitable and ethical business practices and will not tolerate anything less.

While many employees underestimate the significance of the training until they have been educated on the subject, it plays an important role in keeping diversity issues and concerns at the forefront. It increases cultural awareness, knowledge and communication, promotes inclusion and teamwork. More so, it demonstrates a commitment to equality. Like certification for professionals, diversity programs should mimic the essential ongoing, continuing education requirements.

Changing demographics and a difficult social climate have made addressing diversity more important than ever. Understanding and meeting the needs of an increasingly diverse population is dependent upon the ability to foster an inclusive culture in which diverse voices are valued and respected. The opportunity to address diversity is no longer simply a question of social and moral responsibility, but also a matter of achieving excellence and gaining a competitive advantage. It is a win/win situation for the organization.

As members of an institution of higher education, we should model the behavior and process, like pledging to support diversity training. It is important to demonstrate our commitment to equality and tolerance. We should seek every opportunity to promote diversity and understanding through continued education improvement.

widely used systems, PeopleAdmin and SAP.

Employee Relations

The Employee Relations (ER) team led by Tammy Coyle is currently working on digitizing the Employee Relation files to become a paperless section. This project will give the team the ability to review all files electronically. The team is currently in the beginning stages of this project and will update campus as they near completion.

The ER team will also be collaborating with the HR Compensation team and the Information Technology team to facilitate the implementation of the Job Profile Builder software application, coming soon!

Master Data Center

The HR Master Data Center led by Katie Bonner is responsible for maintaining the organizational structure of jobs and positions in addition to reviewing and processing thousands of personnel actions each year. These moving parts are the core of SAP HR to connect other processes and systems such as employment, performance management, training and development, required credentials, time and attendance, benefits and payroll.

In sum, it’s an exciting time for Human Resources. Be on the lookout for more news and updates in the HR Bulletin and HR website.

Work Life

The Work Life program led by Rose Treviño, continues their work toward connecting employees to benefits, family-friendly policies, and programs offered through the University such as our: employee assistance program, Bobcat Balance; Mother Friendly Worksite program; employee wellness program, WellCats; and Employee Discount Program. He moved here with his fiancé, Laine, and their dog. In his spare time, he enjoys rebuilding his 1974 Land Cruiser.
The question was asked, “How did you get started beading and making jewelry?” Well, in 2008 my 12-year-old son went to a boy scout camp where he purchased a hemp macramé necklace. He came home excited and determined to learn how to make these necklaces and sell them. So, off we went to buy a book on how to macramé and some basic supplies. That summer we traveled to Colorado for a wedding and ended up in a really cool bead shop with thousands of beads. I went a little crazy and bought loads. My son did end up making some anklets and sold them to all at the wedding. He made about 100 bucks! Once we got home, he was over the whole enterprise and I was stuck with a whole bunch of beads. I have always had a crafty side, so I decided to start making earrings. Then I called up the organizer of a benefit called the Dam Chili Cook-off and asked if I could try to sell some of my earrings. My buddy told me to come on down and try it out. I sold a bunch, got great feedback on my designs, and donated all my proceeds to the charity that year. At that point, I was hooked, and TR Creative Design was in business. I set up my DBA with the state and started making product in earnest. The timing happened to coincide with the beginning of the Saturday San Marcos Farmer’s Market so I went down and asked what it would take to sell my earrings at market. I’ve been beading and selling at both places ever since.

I primarily make earrings, anklets, eyeglass holders, and bracelets out of bead components that I buy all over the place. I’m self-taught and get ideas from anywhere and everywhere. I’m always inspecting everyone’s earrings for ideas to replicate. I love to go to bead shows and see all the different beads, although this is dangerous for me because I usually spend too much money. The purchasing of beads is just as addictive as the creative process in making new designs. I now have a whole room in my house dedicated to my business and spend many hours in there making jewelry.

You can find me most Saturdays at the San Marcos Farmer’s Market on the Square. The market has been open for about 10 years and I joined and started selling my jewelry there the 1st year it opened. It’s a great market with live music, friendly folks, fresh fruits and veggies, grass-fed beef, many other organic handmade products, and, of course, my jewelry! We are open from 9:00 A.M. -1:00 P.M every weekend all year long. Hint: I don’t go if it’s really nasty weather or cold, but the farmers do! To find out more about the market please check out the Webpage: http://sanmarcosfarmersmarket.com and the Facebook page: https://www.facebook.com/pg/smtnxfarmersmarket.

The Dam Chili Cook-Off is my other primary outlet for selling my jewelry. I have been selling there since 2008 and have a loyal following who wait all year to purchase my earrings. I still give a portion of my proceeds to the charity each year.

The Dam Chili Cook-Off is the primary fundraiser for the San Marcos Youth Service Bureau (YSB) in San Marcos. YSB is a non-profit whose mission is to provide a safe environment for after-school and summer care for at-risk youth. To learn more about YSB please visit their website: http://ysb.org. The cook-off is a very family friendly event with about 40 cooks, lots of good chili, and live music all day long. It’s on the beautiful San Marcos River in Martindale and is held every Fall. You can find information about the cook-off here https://www.facebook.com/DamChili-Cookoff-143371155711517.

So that’s my story. Come see me at market or the cook-off. Both are great fun, and I would love to show you my jewelry.

OFF THE CLOCK is a section in the newsletter that showcases an interesting fact about a staff member in the FSS division. Did you publish a book, do you have a hidden talent, do you have a unique collection, or do you have an interesting hobby (just to name a few suggestions)?

We welcome any information you would like to share in the newsletter!
possibly more qualified to speak about organizational culture than any other, says, "Culture is a nebulous concept and is often an underlying aspect of an organization. Although extensive academic literature exists relating to the topic of organizational culture, there is no generally accepted definition of culture." In spite of the fact that culture is ill-defined, most employees recognize that is a, if not the, essential ingredient in determining your feeling of fit and overall happiness with your job. Another widely held belief with regards to culture is that organizational leaders need to play a major role in creating and sustaining the culture. Therefore, in order to be a positive force for ensuring Texas State has a healthy shared culture, I felt the need to come up with my own meaning of the phrase.

For me, our shared culture has at its core the shared values that we write down and reiterate in ceremonies and celebrations throughout the year. Although we may not always live up to our beliefs, I feel strongly that we must continue to lift them up in order to challenge ourselves to be better. Our shared values include, though not limited to: valuing a diversity of people; valuing inclusiveness; valuing a sense of community; valuing honesty, integrity, compassion, fairness, and respect; valuing dialogue; and valuing the free exchange of ideas.

While our shared values serve as one leg of the stool that is our shared culture, that stool needs two other legs to stand. I believe the other two legs are our mission, and our commitment to communications and transparency.

Unlike a for-profit company, Texas State is not here to make money. Rather, our highest goal is to serve our mission, which is, "Texas State University is a doctorally-granting, student-centered institution dedicated to excellence and innovation in teaching, research, including creative expression, and service. The University strives to create new knowledge, to embrace a diversity of people and ideas, to foster cultural and economic development, and to prepare its graduates to participate fully and freely as citizens of Texas, the nation, and the world."

Sometimes mission statements try to say too much and, in the process, lose their ability to influence organizational culture and to impact day-to-day decision making. For that reason, I tend to simplify our mission when I think of it into two basic ideas: we aspire to make the world, and our particular corner of it, a better place; and, we focus on the creation and dissemination of knowledge. I am constantly thinking of those two basic concepts when I approach decision-making and how those decisions can impact our culture.

I believe the third leg of the stool of our shared culture, as mentioned earlier, is our commitment to communications and transparency. In the interest of our valuation of honesty and our desire for clear communications and transparency, I must clearly state that I often fall short on this point. Despite Herculean efforts and the best of intentions, there always seems to be a message that never reaches its intended audience; we are often far too slow in communicating about timely issues; we sometimes fall victim to pressures to not speak from the heart; we often fail to hear underrepresented voices; and, we often lack just the right words and turns of phrase to adequately convey a message.

In short, we have lots of room to improve when it comes to communications and transparency, but here is the thing: we recognize this shortcoming and are committed to getting better. In many organizations, corporate communications are unapologetically and exclusively a spin-machine for protecting the company's image and managing shareholder value. Although we do want to present Texas State in the best possible light, that is a secondary aspiration to being honest, timely, transparent, fair, and respectful. The fact that we hold these values above corporate self-interest when it comes to communications, even when we are imperfect in our application of this aspiration, speaks directly to the shared culture we are trying to create and cultivate.

In closing, please know that the leadership of the University is committed to making Texas State a great place to work for all of our employees. We want this to be a place where you will be proud to come to work each day, where you feel valued, and where you feel you really are a part of something important and profound. Do your best to remember our core values and to be an active participant in creating the type of culture that you want to be a part of. Do not always accept what is comfortable or convenient, but instead dare to ask difficult questions and work every day towards creating a shared culture and sense of place that lives up to our aspiration.
